Governor,

Do you want Sean to serve on Faith Based and Community Initiatives and also the Clemency Advisory Board? He's interested on serving on both. The last lt. gov served on both, but it's up to your discretion.

Thanks,

Thanks Governor. We agree that state employee/helicopter intervention should be a last resort. We're investigating options for incentives: fuel reimbursement, harvest dividends, etc.

It is unfortunate that this has focused on you. I'd like to shift the focus back onto the department.

I didn't know daily news was already publishing on wolves. Bottom line:state helicopters should be last resort, they're expensive and take opportunity from locals.

We need to pay for locals' fuel, bounty on predators, etc. Until these offers are exhausted we need more aggressive pursuit of incentives provided to those most affected by the predator problem.

Also, curious as to why Board passes buck to governor on this one but not other biological management decisions? Makes it political .

We have to act quickly on this as predators are acting quickly and rural families face ridiculous situation of being forced to import more beef instead of feeding their families our healthy staple of alaskan game. Nonsense. Unacceptable - and not on my watch.

Todd interviewed buddies who live out there... Some confirmation that state intervention isn't first choice w/the locals. But we need to incentivize here. $ for trappers included.

Remember the state senators who were disappointed about having to foot their own bill to the annual Energy Council conference in Washington, D.C.?

Well, a talk show radio host heard their story and offered to help them out to the tune of $500 each. Mike Porcaro of station KENI-AM in Anchorage had some of the boys from the Senate minority - Sens. Gene Therriault, Tom Wagoner and Fred Dyson - on a show last week and pledged to help them fund their transportation costs to the oil and gas fest. Sure enough, the radio host confirmed earlier this week to the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner that he had signed off and sent each of them a check.

In a press conference call this morning, Therriault said he and his colleagues were in DC to spread the news about Gov. Palin's new AGIA bill on the gas pipeline and reassure the nation that Alaska was serious about getting its natural gas to market. He said he's been meeting with representatives from pipeline regulator FERC and other federal and state representatives to explain how the Legislature in Juneau will be tackling AGIA to get it worked and passed this session.

In the kudos for the Daily News department - Therriault said he's been explaining the differences between the Murkowski plan and Palin's AGIA legislation using a diagram and chart published with last Saturday's Daily News story on the bill's introduction.

Thanks for making us look good, senators.

Therriault and the Senate minority gang are attending the conference with several other Alaskan legislators from both chambers. They return next week to get started on the first AGIA hearings, among other things.
